law? 4. What obligations apply to me as a person who downloads or streams files or programs that make it easier for me to download files or programs? The law gives you certain obligations if you download or stream files or programs. These are the obligations that you have to meet as an ordinary person: You must not do anything to interfere with the normal use and functionality of the DVD player, server or other equipment on which the work is stored; You must not modify the DVD player, server or other equipment on which the work is stored; You must keep your copies of the work secure; You must not put any additional media, including computer-readable storage media such as hard discs, into the DVD player, server or other equipment on which the work is stored; and You must not play the work or allow anyone else to play the work except in the way in which the provider of the work allows you to do so. The law also makes an exception to the first of these obligations if you are doing it to play a work in the way in which the provider of the work allows you to do so. Section 3 of the Copyright, Designs and Patents Act 1988 is about what obligations apply if you modify a work. 4.1 What are my obligations as a person who modifies a work? The law says: You must keep safe all copies of the work which you make, or authorise someone else to keep safe, and you must not use them for any purpose to the detriment of the owner of the work. You must not do anything to induce the download, or stream, of any part of the work from a website, other than what is usual and necessary for the website to work. You must not attempt to charge for any part of the work. You may make and keep 82157476af
